WELCOME TO METRO BOSTON

MORGAN ROUSSEAU, MANAGING EDITOR

Once upon a time I was afraid of flying. No, scratch that — I was terrified at the very thought of it. Careening through the clouds at ungodly speeds in a tin can was hardly my idea of safe. Of course, as we all know, statistics show that these fears were unfounded. Now I fly, happily, with a little help from a mile-high Bloody Mary. But what about trains? Recent high-profile derailments have a lot of travelers questioning whether they should be afraid to go "all aboard." A Metro reporter investigates. Read more on page 6 and visit metro.us for more of our transit coverage.

FLA SHERIFF: ONE DEPUTY FAILED TO STOP SHOOTER

1 Only one sheriff's deputy failed to stop the gunman who killed 17 people at a Florida high school, the Broward County sheriff said on Sunday, dismissing reports that other deputies did not enter the school during the attack as unverified. Broward County Sheriff Scott Israel also said his department acted properly in at least 16 of the 18 calls it received before the massacre, warning that Nikolas Cruz, the 19-year-old suspect, was dangerous. Israel rejected a call for his resignation from a state legislator and defended his department on CNN's "State of the Union" on Sunday from criticism that deputies missed warning signs about Cruz, a former student at Marjory Stoneman Douglas High School in Parkland, Florida. Gov. Rick Scott on Sunday asked the Florida Department of Law Enforcement to investigate the law enforcement response to the shooting.

WH: NORTH KOREA TALKS MUST END NUKE PROGRAM

2 The White House said any talks with North Korea must lead to an end to its nuclear program after senior officials from Pyongyang visiting South Korea said on Sunday their government was open to talks with the United States. The North Korean delegation, in Pyeongchang for the closing ceremony of the Winter Olympics, met at an undisclosed location with South Korean President Moon Jae-in, and expressed a willingness to meet with the United States, Moon's office said in a statement. The Pyongyang delegation said developments in relations between the two Koreas and between North Korea and the United States should go hand in hand, according to the statement. The Olympics gave a boost to recent engagement between the two Koreas after more than a year of sharply rising tensions over the North's missile program.

GUN LOBBY PUSHES BACK ON TRUMP'S GUN PLANS

4 The National Rifle Association pushed back on Sunday against modest proposals by President Donald Trump and other Republicans to change U.S. gun laws in the wake of a school shooting in Florida that killed 17 students and staff. The powerful gun lobby group does not support Trump's proposals to raise the age limit for buying certain types of guns and to ban bump stocks that enable semi-automatic rifles to shoot hundreds of rounds a minute, a spokeswoman said on ABC's "This Week." As November congressional elections draw closer, Trump and Republicans are under pressure to show they are responding to concerns about school safety without angering supporters who oppose gun control. Trump has also said he supports legislation to tighten background checks for gun buyers, although he has not provided specific details.

NEW SAMSUNG PHONE FOCUSES ON SOCIAL MEDIA

5 Samsung Electronics unveiled its flagship Galaxy S9 smartphone on Sunday with an emphasis on visual applications for social media, hoping to attract tech-savvy young consumers. With the global smartphone market set to stay flat or even shrink after meagre growth of 1 percent last year, vendors are focusing on features designed to encourage consumers to ditch their old phones sooner. Samsung launched the S9 at the mobile gadget fair in Barcelona, attracting thousands of reporters to see how the world's biggest smartphone maker could innovate in a category where the big players are technologically closer than ever. DJ Koh, Samsung's president of IT and mobile communications, said the most important function of a phone today was "visual communication" and the Galaxy S9 had been designed for the visual and social generation.

Gun control advocates point to Massachusetts' ban on assault weapons as one of the reasons for its low gun homicide rate. GETTY IMAGES

Could Mass. gun laws set an example for the entire United States?

Mayor Walsh said the conversation should focus on preventing shootings.

Federal policymakers eyeing gun law reforms in the wake of the Parkland, Florida school shooting should look toward Massachusetts, Gov. Charlie Baker said last week.

Asked about President Donald Trump's suggestion of equipping certain trained teachers with concealed guns, Baker and Boston Mayor Martin Walsh, who spoke to reporters separately at a downtown Boston event focusing on opioid addiction, each said they instead wanted to see a focus on the processes through which people obtain guns.

"I've said several times on some of these other major tragedies associated with guns that I would like to see the federal government pursue many of the strategies and the policies that we have here in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," Baker said, pointing to the state's assault weapons ban.

"There are very few states in the country where the chief of police is the vehicle through which you get your gun licenses and your license to carry and that chief of police is in a position to revoke your license if they deem you to be a danger," Baker said. "With respect to teachers, I don't think more guns is the answer, in classrooms, to this problem. I think we should be doing a better job with many of the things we do here in Massachusetts to ensure that people who purchase guns have to pursue a process to get licensed to do so that's far more refined and restricted than it is in many other places."

In a series of tweets Thursday, Trump discussed the possibility of giving concealed guns to "highly trained, gun adept" teachers and coaches with military experience or other specialized trainings. Such teachers could serve as a deterrent and "immediately fire back if a savage sicko came to a school with bad intentions," Trump wrote.

"If a potential 'sicko shooter' knows that a school has a large number of very weapons talented teachers [and others] who will be instantly shooting, the sicko will NEVER attack that school," the president tweeted.

Walsh said Trump "doesn't take the time to understand" and suggested he speak with U.S. Rep. Stephen Scalise, who was shot in the hip during a congressional baseball team practice in June, and former Rep. Gabrielle Giffords, who was shot in the head in 2011 while meeting with constituents in a grocery store parking lot.

"Just talk to those two, two that have been shot, and ask them, should the coaches on the first and third base side have a gun?" Walsh said. "Should they have a gun to protect them from playing softball where he got shot, or baseball, whatever he was playing? I just think there has to be a better answer than that."

Instead of discussing armed personnel in schools who could respond to an active shooter scenario, Walsh said the conversation should focus on preventing shootings to begin with, suggesting an expansion of the national background check required to buy firearms.

"How about we not let an 18-year-old buy an assault rifle with unlimited amounts of clips and be able to buy tear gas and a bulletproof vest?" Walsh said. "How about we start there and stop that from happening first before we start talking about arming everyone to shoot the intruder that comes in the school?" STATE HOUSE NEWS SERVICE

What's going on with all these deadly train crashes?

The scene along a portion of the Interstate 5 highway after an Amtrak crash on Dec. 18, 2017. GETTY IMAGES

These harrowing experiences, experts say, could be avoided by implementing safety technology.

SCOTT SIMONE
letters@metro.us

In a literal sense, railway safety seems to be off track across the country, as three fatal train accidents have captured the media spotlight in as many months.

First, in December, there was an Amtrak train that derailed in Washington state as it took a corner at more than twice the speed limit, killing three people and injuring nearly 100 others. Then, in late January, an Amtrak passenger train carrying Republican members of the U.S. Congress slammed into a garbage truck in Virginia, killing one person on the truck. And earlier this month, an Amtrak train crashed into a parked freight train in South Carolina, killing two crewmembers and injuring at least 116 others.

These are just the latest headline-grabbing railway disasters over the past few years, including a 2015 Amtrak derailment in Philadelphia that killed eight passengers and sent 185 others to hospitals.

"I remember being flung to the other side of the carriage," said Eimear Kelleher, who was a passenger on the train that derailed in Philadelphia. "The train had flipped to the point where the seats were now the roof."

"The scene was actual chaos. It was like an episode of 'Grey's Anatomy' — blood, stretchers, and a man with what looked like a cactus coming out of his head," Kelleher said.

These harrowing experiences, experts say, could be avoided by implementing safety technology, such as positive train control. This advanced system is designed to automatically stop a train before certain accidents occur, including train-to-train collisions, derailments caused by train speed, and train movements through misaligned switches.

"Human life is cheap compared to how much it would cost to implement this technology."
Michael Barasch

"That's technology that would've prevented the Philadelphia derailment, the accident in Washington state, and the accident in South Carolina," says Keith Millhouse, who was instrumental in implementing positive train control in Metrolink, Southern California's regional rail system. The problem, according to the majority of train operators, is an economic one.

"Human life is cheap compared to how much it would cost to implement this technology," says Michael Barasch, a lawyer who's represented passengers injured in both the Philadelphia and South Carolina accidents.

"Some operators take the position of, 'Well gee, this is too expensive, we can't do it,' Because of that foot-dragging, people have lost their lives that shouldn't have," said Millhouse.

Other experts argue that the perceived safety problem is a result of the media.

"I'm not sure we're seeing so many accidents and derailments, we're seeing a couple that are getting a lot of press," said Allan Zarembski, the director of the Railroad Engineering and Safety Program at the University of Delaware.

Referring to statistics from the Federal Railroad Administration that show a downtick in accidents and fatalities, Zarembski said, "Nothing I've seen in the statistics from 2017 show that it was a major aberration in safety."

Woman stabbed to death, man wounded at Massachusetts library

A Massachusetts man armed with a hunting knife stabbed a 22-year-old woman to death at a public library in an unprovoked attack on Saturday and wounded a man who tried to come to her aid, a prosecutor said.

The suspect, Jeffery Yao, 23, of Winchester, approached the woman and stabbed her multiple times with a 10-inch hunting knife at a library reading room table, Middlesex County District Attorney Marian Ryan said at a news conference.

The woman, a resident of Winchester, a Boston suburb, was slashed and stabbed in the upper torso and head and died at a hospital. A 77-year-old Winchester man who tried to intervene was stabbed in the arm but not seriously hurt, Ryan said.

Police arrested Yao at the library. He was charged with murder and assault and jailed without bail pending arraignment on Monday. It was not immediately clear if he had an attorney.

Police are seeking a motive in the attack. The slain woman has not been identified pending notification of relatives.

The library said on its Twitter feed that it would remain closed until Monday afternoon. REUTERS

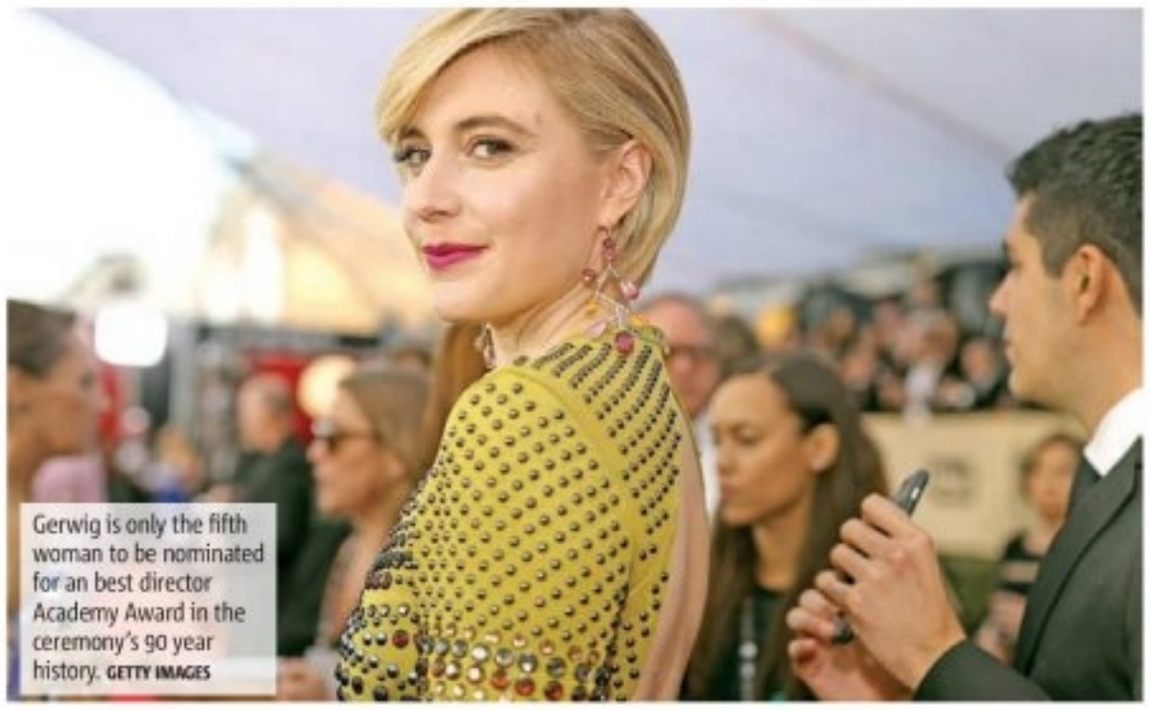
'Win or not, it's still a triumph'

Ahead of the Oscars this weekend, we chatted with actress, screenwriter and director Greta Gerwig about her nomination for "Lady Bird," and how excesses are bad — even when it comes to feminism. GABRIELA ACOSTA, MWN

Greta Gerwig considers herself more screenwriter than director, but her work as the latter has been revelatory. Gerwig is nominated for an Oscar for Best Director with her film "Lady Bird," a woman's story starring women — and told by women.

Of course, Gerwig isn't new to the world of film and television. With a career spanning more than 10 years, the Sacramento native has worked as an actress on films like "Frances Ha" and television series like "The Mindy Project," among others.

During a break before her activities leading up to the March 4 Academy Awards ceremony, Gerwig talks film, feminism and fiction.



Gerwig is only the fifth woman to be nominated for an best director Academy Award in the ceremony's 90 year history. GETTY IMAGES

Where were you when you received the news of your Oscar nomination?
In Los Angeles! I actually tried to get up early, but I didn't make it. [Laughs] I woke up late and I got the news over the phone. My first reaction was to cry, then laugh, and in the end, I screamed. There was even a report in the hotel that something had happened to me! I'm still in shock.

When a woman is recognized in any field, does that influence the rest of the world?
I think it does. We're at a stage where women no longer want to remain silent and are raising their voices. I recently learned that I am the fifth woman on the list of the best directors for an Academy Award in its 90 years. You can imagine everything that this nomination brings. Whether you win or not, it is a triumph.

How close or far are you from feminism?
It's complicated because the problem today is that feminism falls into excesses. I think that to fit in with the core of modern feminism, we have to find the right way to combat and transform machismo. When feminists talk about the position of women in society, it's always about men being leaders in all kinds of professions. But I feel like we're making changes. There's still a lot to be done.

Looking ahead, how do you think winning an Oscar could change your career?
I don't like to get ahead of the facts. I have many men around me [nominated], and my fight goes beyond that. These types of nominations open up your field of action, allow you to more easily make new projects. I think it's good that they're looking for women, that they're looking at their careers, and they're seeing all of that.

"Lady Bird" explores the relationship between mother and daughter, and it's one that's hard to explain. I must confess that "Lady Bird" is like the transcript of my adolescent journals. I grew up in Sacramento and attended a Catholic school before escaping to the other side of the country to New York, where I just wanted to write theater. Exposing those changes in both women on the big screen, their internal and physical processes, their emotional burdens, was difficult but thanks to Saoirse Ronan (Lady Bird) and Laurie Metcalf (Marion McPherson) we did it.

Alex Garland doesn't want a pat on the back

The "Annihilation" director on his star-studded, all-female cast and inspiration.

GREGORY WAKEMAN
Gregory.Wakeman@metro.us

Natalie Portman stars in the sci-fi horror fantasy. PARAMOUNT PICTURES

"Annihilation" is a defiantly original film.

It has stunning visuals and a peculiar atmosphere, and bravely deviates from Jeff VanderMeer's source material. And it has been widely praised for its predominantly female cast, starring Natalie Portman, Jennifer Jason Leigh, Gina Rodriguez, and Tessa Thompson.

But writer and director Alex Garland doesn't want to be recognized for the casting. Instead, he wants to focus on the unusual originality of the film, which follows the four women as scientists that enter an environmental disaster zone, only to be confronted by a series of psychological and indefinable obstacles. Over the phone, Garland talks adapting the source material, his influences and never dumbing down his movies.

How did you first come across Jeff VanderMeer's novel?

I was in postproduction on "Ex Machina," and one of the producers, Scott Rudin, said he wanted me to take a look at adapting it. It was very original, and that in itself was unusual. Most books and movies are in some way a repetition of other stories. It is unusual to find a one-off, something that is only like itself.

What did you want to bring to the big-screen from the novel?

The fundamentals of the book are in the film. It's team of female scientists entering a sealed off area and a trippy, dreamlike, and hallucinogenic environment. It's got some structural differences. I knew that I needed to be true to the atmosphere. I wanted to try to recreate the feeling I had when I first read it.

GETTY

What was the appeal of a predominantly female cast?

The thing that I thought was most interesting was the absence of a conversation about the scientists being female. I'm steering clear of it to try and preserve the absence of the conversation. That's where the point resides. It would be undermining the purpose to start drawing attention to it.

There's a lot of science and jargon in "Annihilation," did you ever consider dumbing it down for a wider audience?

I'm definitely not trying to make this for as big an audience as possible. I never think about that. And the box office for my films demonstrates that, I think. I have never had a mainstream hit and I can't imagine I will. I had an accidental one years ago when I wrote 'The Beach,' which was trippy, druggy and somehow popped into the mainstream.

You can feel aspects of "Alien" and "2001: A Space Odyssey" when watching the film, talk about their influence.

I think they are present just because I have seen them. And they are films that I really, really like. Are they going to be an influence? Definitely. But one of the films I was most conscious of when making it was an old Walter Hill movie called "Southern Comfort" and "Apocalypse Now." It is really a journey through countryside that is getting progressively more surreal and extreme as you get deeper in.

"Annihilation" is in theaters Feb. 23.

A modern take on the mafia

Chatting with James Norton, star of AMC's "McMafia," about going method and how the series is different from "The Godfather."

RACHAEL VAUGHAN CLEMMONS
rachael.clemmons@metro.us

"McMafia" — which premieres tonight at 10 p.m. on AMC — might look familiar as far as dramatic mafia pieces go, there are a few things that set the new series apart.

One of those things is James Norton. The 32-year-old of "War and Peace" and "Grantchester" fame, plays Alex Godman, a young banker caught between his aristocratic, British upbringing, and the undertow of his family's involvement in Russian organized crime.

Thankfully, IRL Norton is lovely — and excited to wax poetic about his new role. "We're all in a weird way drawn to the world of the mafia," he says over the phone. "I think it's a slightly anarchic, subversive thing, but there's also a romance and a glamour and a sort of honor almost to it."

Especially when it comes to corruption. "Any mafia tale in itself is obviously compelling, but what feels rare about 'McMafia' is how on point it is," he says. "A lot of [things] happened whilst being on the set: things with the press, the collusion between the White House and the Kremlin, the conversations around corruption. To do a show which is a great piece of drama but also an important catalyst for an important conversation was a big, big draw."

For Alex Godman, things go from 0 to 100 pretty quickly in "McMafia," premiering tonight on AMC.
NICK WALL/CUBA PICTURES/CPL GODMAN/AMC

"McMafia" manages to bring the mafia — that very popular cornerstone of popular culture — and give it a modern twist. Instead of sex and a sense of integrity, Norton says, it's all about money and power. "It's pretty brutal," he says. "The romance and honor is out of the window."

GETTY

So how did Norton manage to strike the balance with Alex between British sensibility and a Russian family linked to organized crime? By going method, of course. Well. Kind of.

"Ultimately you're going to be in this person's head for eight months. You have to know and love that character. [But] I don't know, I don't think I'm a method actor." he says, laughing.

"My approach is pretty similar to most people," he continues. "To prepare for it, I spent as much time as I could in his head. Doing relatively mundane things like brushing my teeth or walking around, going to the park, usually on my own. Just familiarizing myself with his head, his thoughts. I'm not hardcore method by any means, but I think some of the people from some of my local shops might think I'm a little bit freaky."

In the end, Norton is certainly happy with his portrayal (for which he learned some Russian and practiced systema, aka hardcore Russian martial arts). "For me, a good piece of writing will explore that wonderful, messy grey area," he says. "Right now in this world there are a lot of people like Alex who have been tempted. And it was really fun and exciting to play a character like that."

Why do people 'bash' bankers?

If money is the root of all that is evil, what does that make bankers? ISTOCK

A study shows that the majority of financial professionals experience "banker bashing" from the media and general public.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Bankers have been portrayed in an almost cartoon-villain-like manner since the financial crisis of 2008. But has a lot of that criticism been unjust banker bashing?

According to a report by Selby Jennings titled "Lehman Brothers 10 Years On: Banking and Financial Services Outlook 2018," the majority of bankers believe there is a healthy amount of distrust and hatred being thrown at them by both the media and the general public.

In this study, they found that half of the bankers who took the survey had received occasional jeering banker bashing comments but no longer believe that bankers maintain the "pariah" status they once had. Thirty-seven percent of those bankers surveyed said they believe banker bashing is "alive and well and will continue for the foreseeable future." On the other hand, only 10 percent said they had never experienced banker bashing.

"The ripple effect of the financial crisis, looking back 10 years ago, is that there is a lot of criticism of the banking industry in general," says Oliver Cooke, the head of North America at Selby Jennings. "There is a lot of criticism, particularly around some of the unethical practices that took place prior to 2008, which led to the crisis and it was clear that to folks in the media and also to the wider public bankers were seen as the enemy."

After the '08 collapse, the government passed tough regulations such as the Dodd-Frank Act, and the grassroots Occupy Wall Street movement brought economic inequality to the forefront of political discussion. So with the financial industry under increased regulation, why won't people give bankers a break?

Cooke believes the perception of shady bankers is unfair, but the damage has been done. "I think people need to realize that banking isn't like 'The Wolf of Wall Street.' I think some people believe it still is. Some aspects of that movie might have been true for some firms back in the late '80s, but the times have truly changed. Banking has gone through a very big process of looking at itself," he says.

One of the other startling discoveries that Cooke and his colleagues made in this study is that many bankers are less confident in their positions and are looking to break into different career paths.

"Only 20 percent of the respondents said that they were 100 percent happy in finance and had never considered moving to another industry," Cooke explains.

"Almost half have been actively searching for a different role within the industry or outside of it. I think [banker bashing] has had an impact on how proud people are to work for the banking industry."

The question is: Do these bankers deserve our sympathy after the part they played in the economic collapse a decade ago? Maybe someday people will be willing to forgive and forget.

GEISEL SCHOOL OF MEDICINE AT DARTMOUTH
Dartmouth-Hitchcock NORRIS COTTON CANCER CENTER

TENURE-TRACK FACULTY POSITION IN BIOINFORMATICS AND COMPUTATIONAL ONCOLOGY

The Geisel School of Medicine at Dartmouth and the Norris Cotton Cancer Center (NCCC) invite applications for a tenure-track appointment at the rank of Assistant or Associate Professor as part of a targeted expansion of bioinformatics and computational oncology faculty. NCCC offers a dynamic and interactive environment, with a commitment to research excellence. Faculty appointment will be in the department of Biomedical Data Science or Molecular and Systems Biology, and will include membership in one of the six research programs at NCCC. Dartmouth faculty members benefit from highly collaborative and collegial interactions across campus, inclusive of departments at Geisel, Arts & Sciences, the Thayer School of Engineering, and Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center.

Successful applicants will have vigorous and innovative research programs focused on computational systems biology, bioinformatics, computational biology and biophysics, genomics, epigenomics or single-cell analyses to study and understand complex aspects of cancer biology, including but not limited to, cell growth and proliferation, cell signaling, gene expression and genome organization, metastasis, drug resistance, tumor microenvironment, and cell-cell communication. Candidates are expected to have a strong record of scholarship, to develop an independent research program, and to participate in graduate-level teaching. Evidence of the ability to secure extramural funding is desirable. Applicants should have a PhD, MD, or equivalent degree with relevant post-doctoral training.

A generous start-up package as well as access to state-of-the-art research facilities will be provided. Individuals will be given opportunities for mentorship and teaching of students in relevant PhD graduate programs (e.g., Program in Molecular and Cellular Biology, Program in Quantitative Biomedical Sciences, and the Program in Experimental & Molecular Medicine). Training grants (e.g. the Molecular and Cellular Biology Training Grant, the Burroughs Wellcome Fund Big Data in the Life Sciences for Unifying Population and Laboratory-based Sciences Training Grant, and the Quantitative Biomedical Sciences Training Grant) are available to support trainees in areas relevant to the successful candidate.

The successful candidate will have affiliations at NCCC (one of 49 NCI-designated Comprehensive Cancer Centers); opportunities for innovative research method development and application through Dartmouth's supercomputing networks (e.g., Discovery); access to Dartmouth's Core Centers, Dartmouth's Clinical and Translational Science Institute (CTSA; called Synergy); and may benefit from interactions with existing NIH Centers for Biomedical Research Excellence (COBREs) at Dartmouth.

Applicants should upload a cover letter, curriculum vitae and research statement to: https://apply.interfolio.com/48757, and arrange for three letters of recommendation to be submitted directly to Interfolio.

Screening of applications will begin February 19 and continue until the position is filled.

Dartmouth is located in the picturesque Upper Connecticut River Valley on the New Hampshire and Vermont border; a vibrant, academic and professional community offering excellent schools, lively arts, and an unmatched quality of life in a beautiful, rural setting. Amenities associated with urban areas in Boston MA, Burlington VT, and Montreal QC are all within a few hours drive.

Is it OK to flirt at work?

Think before you take your work crush up a notch.

PAT KING
patrick.king@metro.us

Thanks to the #MeToo movement, workplace dynamics between men and women have begun to change for the better.

But let's say you have a harmless "work crush" at your nine-to-five. Is it OK to flirt at work?

According to Holly Caplan, a workplace-issues expert and author of the book "Surviving the D--k Clique: A Girl's Guide to Surviving the Male-Dominated Corporate World," there is no room for acting upon any romantic feelings at work.

"I don't advise it at this point for a couple of reasons," she says. "It's really about perception and how you're perceived if you do flirt and what you are inviting. There are too many questions around that.

"It's safer to not flirt because you don't want to get yourself in a predicament," she says. "No matter how harmless your flirting is, someone can perceive it in a different manner."

Keep romance out of the office

Caplan believes that the firestorm an office romance could bring would be too detrimental to your career and your reputation. If you sense any mutual romantic feelings between you and your work crush, it's better to go outside the office to figure out where you stand.

"Leave it for out of the office. It doesn't have to be done in your cubicles under the bright fluorescent lights," says Caplan. "If you have a crush on someone or feel like flirting and there's something you want to pursue with someone, I would take it outside of the office. Don't make the office your anchor for your relationship.

"Meet at something where you're away from work, and you can actually get to know them better," Caplan says.

When you share something that is work-related, it can be perceived it as something it may not be.

Put it on paper – sign a love contract

If you and your work crush have a real spark, do your part to make it official before things get out of control. Many offices offer employees is "love contracts," which are designed to keep office relationships on record with their human-resources departments.

These agreements are designed to protect the employer and employees; if an office romance turns sour, the company can take steps to de-escalate workplace tensions, such as transferring people into different departments.

Caplan says she believes signing a love contract is the best option for co-workers who want to take their relationship to the next level.

"Now you have complete transparency, and it protects the employees and the employer because they are considered separate entities."

All in all, sitcom-ready "will-they-won't-they" office relationships have no place at work. So if you feel the need to flirt with someone in the cubicle next to you, think again.

Bruins swing monster trade, land NY's Nash

The Bruins land an elite goal-scorer ahead of the NHL trade deadline.

MATT BURKE
sports@metro.us

Much to the delight of Bruins fans everywhere, Don Sweeney and the B's front office are "going for it" this season.

Boston shipped forwards Ryan Spooner and Matt Beleskey, prospect Ryan Lindgren, a 2018 first-round pick and a 2019 seventh rounder to the Rangers on Sunday morning in exchange for six-time All-Star forward Rick Nash. Nash is one of the biggest names the Bruins have ever landed around time of a trade deadline, but it remains to be seen if the 33-year-old still has enough gas in the tank to be a legit difference-maker in the postseason.

Metro New York sports editor and confirmed puck head Joe Pantorno believes it was an excellent move for the B's.

"Nash is very serviceable and will wind up with 25-ish goals this year," Pantorno said. "He's a great rental for Boston. Steep price, but definitely worth it in my opinion."

While his better days are behind him, Nash still has put up 18 goals this season and will provide a lower-line wing option for the Bruins.

One of the big beefs Rangers fans had with Nash during his time in Manhattan was that he never exactly lit it up during the postseason. Nash had five playoff runs with the Rangers and one playoff journey with the team that drafted him, the Blue Jackets, but only once registered over five goals in a single postseason. In 77 career playoff games, Nash has just 15 goals and 26 assists to his name.

"It's a legit concern given his reputation of being a no-show in the playoffs," Pantorno said. "But that was as one of the bell cows of the Rangers' offense. He's entering a Bruins team this is one of the best in the East where he can come in as a second or third-line winger and add scoring depth and support behind that first line. He doesn't need to have a point-per-game average in the postseason. If he can repeat his 2014-15 where he put up 14 points in 19 games, I think that'd be perfect for Boston."

Nash was the first overall pick in the 2002 NHL Draft and quickly became one of hockey's top pure goal-scorers. In just his second season in the league, he popped in 41 goals. As recently as the 2014-15 season, Nash eclipsed the 40-goal mark during the regular season.

The Bruins added a scoring punch by acquiring Rick Nash from the New York Rangers on Sunday morning. GETTY IMAGES

Danny Ainge's decision to deal the No. 1 pick has worked out well considering Jayson Tatum is the Celtics' newest star this season. GETTY IMAGES

sports@metro.us

The Celtics rookie is grinding through the second half of this long NBA season.

When the Celtics traded the No. 1 overall pick to the Philadelphia 76ers and proceeded to draft Jayson Tatum at No. 3, the move was met with some skepticism.

Armchair scouts wondered if the Celtics would regret passing up on point guard Markelle Fultz, a player many most likely didn't see much of during his one year at the University of Washington.

But it's probably safe to say there isn't much of any doubt remaining when it comes to whether or not Celtics president of basketball operations made the right move.

Tatum has shown superstar potential during his rookie campaign while Fultz has dealt with injuries and shooting mechanics with things as simple as free throws.

The two are at such completely different ends of the spectrum right now that the debate on which player will have a better career has ceased, at least for now.

But Tatum is still being discussed around town, and for good reason.

After all, this is a player who many feel the Celtics will be able to build around for years to come. Others, perhaps in a bid to relive that magical 2007-08 season, might be more willing to part with him in a package deal if that means bringing back a superstar player such as Anthony Davis to put next to Kyrie Irving and Gordon Hayward, immediately making the C's favorites out of the Eastern Conference.

Jason Tatum by the numbers

13.5 points per game
6th (among NBA rookies)

5.1 rebounds per game
7th

42.7% from 3
1st

31 minutes per game
4th

What everyone can probably agree on, though, is that the All-Star break came just in time for the C's and their young guns like Tatum.

A quick look at some stats will tell you that Tatum may have hit that dreaded rookie wall that the long NBA season brings.

From the beginning of the season to the end of December (40 games), Tatum averaged 14.1 points on 50.8 percent shooting from the field while grabbing 5.6 rebounds. But from the beginning of January up until the All Star break, those numbers dipped to 12.3 points per game on 41.9 percent shooting and 4.2 rebounds.

Of course Tatum was not going to remain at the top of the NBA in three-point field goal percentage, where he was to begin the season. Through his first 33 games, Tatum shot a staggering 51.5 percent from three-point range. Since then, he's come back down to earth, shooting just 32.5 percent over his last 28 games. That still gives him a very respectable three-point shooting percentage of 42.9 percent.

The drop in play, combined with the Celtics' recent struggles heading into the break and the return of Marcus Smart to the court, had many thinking Brad Stevens would tinker with the starting lineup and potentially move Tatum to the bench.

Through two post-All-Star break games, though, Tatum has remained in the starting lineup – and the C's are 2-0.

But perhaps there shouldn't be so much focus on who's starting the game, and instead who's out there at the end of games.

As of Sunday, Tatum led all of the NBA in fourth-quarter plus/minus, at plus-149, meaning while he's on the court in the 4th quarter, the Celtics have outscored opponents by 149 points.

Rookie wall or not, expect to see plenty of Tatum down the stretch as the Celtics position themselves for a playoff run.

Vitamin B1 (Thiamine) After Cardiac Arrest Study

Learn about this post cardiac arrest study that may affect you or someone you know.

Cardiac arrest is an emergency condition in which your heart and breathing stop, requiring cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR) to restart the heart. Sudden cardiac arrest affects approximately 300,000 people annually in the U.S.

Thiamine After Cardiac Arrest (THACA) is an emergency medicine research study designed to determine if Vitamin B1 (Thiamine) can improve survival and prevent brain injury in patients who have had a cardiac arrest. There are currently no medications known to have a beneficial effect on post-arrest outcome, and brain injury and death are very common. Vitamin B1 deficiency is not uncommon after cardiac arrest, and deficiency is known to cause brain injury in other settings. This research study is taking place at Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center and will last for approximately 4-5 years. Participants who are brought to the hospital after a cardiac arrest and are enrolled in this study will be randomly assigned to receive Vitamin B1 or placebo (no active medication) for two days after suffering a cardiac arrest.

Because of the importance of administering Vitamin B1 (Thiamine) as soon as possible after cardiac arrest in order to maximize the chance of finding a benefit, this study will be conducted under exception from informed consent (EFIC) in accordance with the federal Food and Drug Administration (FDA) regulations. EFIC is allowed only when testing possible treatments for life-threatening conditions for which there is no alternative proven treatment, when obtaining consent is not possible because the study treatment must be administered quickly and a legally authorized representative of the patient is not present or reachable.

When legally authorized representatives are available to provide consent, research staff will obtain consent prior to enrollment. For participants enrolled under EFIC, they or their representatives will be notified of enrollment as soon as possible and asked if they would like to continue participation, with the option to withdraw from the study at any time.

The purpose of this handout is to notify our community about this study and to provide contact information and resources where you can learn more. If you do not wish to be a participant in this study, please visit the website below or call the number listed below to find out how you can opt out. Individuals who opt out will be sent a bracelet and the study team will maintain a list of these induvial to ensure they are not enrolled under EFIC.

Aries Don't make hasty decisions regarding your home, family or personal life. Find out all you can before you make a move to avoid a big mistake.

Taurus Do your own thing. What you have to offer others will affect how they view you. Step things up a bit and make your point heard, while fulfilling your promises.

Gemini The odds are against you if you get into an argument. Focus more on helping others instead of just trying to get ahead. Important relationships will be on shaky ground.

Cancer Lead the way and do your own thing. Your insight, innovative outlook and persuasive personality will encourage good things to unfold. Personal gains look promising.

Leo Be on the secretive side regarding your assets and finances. If you are too open, someone will take advantage of the shared information and put you in jeopardy financially.

Virgo Take part in charity events or offer your assistance to children or older family member who could use some guidance, support or company. Love and romance are highlighted.

Libra Don't bring work home if you want to keep the peace. Personal responsibilities should be taken care of first if you want to avoid criticism.

Scorpio Embrace the people who have always been there for you and build a strong circle of friends. A connection you share with someone special will change your life.

Sagittarius Your generosity will get you into trouble. Use your charm, not your cash, to win someone's respect or love. The best change to pursue is the one that begins within.

Capricorn The knowledge and experience you possess will help you decide what's best for you. Reconnecting with people from your past will help you gain insight and move forward.

Aquarius Monitor your spending and keep your reactions to a minimum. Concentrate more on personal change, not on trying to change others. Question your motives.

Pisces Be leery of anyone using emotional manipulation. If someone or something makes you angry, take a pass until you know you can handle the heat. EUGENIA LAST
